Clemens' arm could use an All-Star break

By STEVEN KRASNER
Journal-Bulletin Sports Writer
CHICAGO — Roger Clemens has a "dead arm."

The Boston Red Sox right-hander, who lasted only six-plus innings in his start Sunday night in Texas, admitted that yesterday while getting ready to work out with the rest of the American League All-Stars at Wrigley Field.

"I've had a dead arm since Baltimore at home," said Clemens, referring to his June 23 start against the Orioles.

The Rocket pitched nine innings that day, allowing six hits and two runs, neither of which was earned. He also walked five.

Since that day, Clemens has pitched three times. The right-hander went eight innings in a 4-3 win over Toronto, and seven in a 7-3 loss to Minnesota, prior to Sunday night's no-decision.

"I've been throwing deep in the count the last few games," said Clemens. "It's catching up to me."

So in some ways, Clemens wouldn't mind if Oakland's Tony LaRussa, the A.L. manager, doesn't use him in tonight's All-Star Game. But Clemens said he would pitch if called upon.

"If I have the option, I'd rather not," said Clemens. "It's up to Tony, just like in 1988. I left it up to (Minnesota manager) Tom Kelly. If he wants me, it's my day to throw so I could do it."

Clemens had more to say yesterday than he did after Sunday night's

AN AILING ARM: Red Sox ace hurler Roger Clemens claims his "arm is dead."

All-Star invitation might bring out the best in Burks

By STEVEN KRASNER

CHICAGO — The cab driver wasn't sure exactly where to go. Of course, he knew where Wrigley Field was.

But Ellis Burks and his Boston Red Sox teammate, Roger Clemens, wanted to be dropped at the players' entrance for yesterday's workout.

Still, the cab driver was at a loss. So he dropped them off in the vicinity of the ballpark and wished them luck.

Burks and Clemens got out of the cab and set off on foot, walking through a little tunnel that brought them nearer to their destination.

"It was hot as hell," said Burks. "It took us about 20 minutes. He dropped us way on the other side of the ballpark."

As they neared Wrigley Field, there were throngs of people purchasing memorabilia and waiting for the gates to open so they could go in and watch batting practice, the home run derby and the Equi-tie Old Timers' game. Clemens drew some second looks.

Not Burks. "They didn't know who I was," said Burks with a slight smile. "It's all right. No biggie."

But Burks' selection to the American League All-Star team is a biggie for the center fielder in many ways, even though he won't be able to play because of a strained left hamstring.

For one thing, it means that Burks, at the age of 25, has been recognized as being worthy of joining the game's best players for a night in the national spotlight.

And that should pump some more

Bailey is legend in the making

BILL PARRILLO

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. — As with any self-respecting Indiana schoolboy basketball player, he has seen the movie "Hoosiers."

"Three times," says Damon Bailey.

"Get a little emotional there at the end?" he is asked.

"Yeah, a little," Bailey says, smiling at the thought. "I don't think anybody can really understand it unless they go up there and see it for themselves."

Damon Bailey would know all about that, of course.

Perhaps you remember the movie. The story line. How the small school from the small town in Indiana makes it all the way to the state championship, amid all sorts of trials and tribulations, and then wins it all on a last-second shot by the team's star.

Nice movie. True story, too. Happened about 20 years ago. But those things come along once in a lifetime and Hollywood takes care of the rest.

Except in this case. In this case, Hoosiers happened again. This past spring. And Damon Bailey lived it. He took his team, Bedford North Lawrence High, all the way to the state final at the Hoosier Dome and then, before 41,000 people, scored his team's last 11 points in the game's final two minutes for a come-from-behind, 63-60 victory.

"The last two minutes, my teammates knew I wanted to the ball," Bailey said. "They knew I wanted it and just gave it to me. To be honest, it's a credit to them."

He is a guard, 6-foot-3, 150 pounds, and he is here at the U.S.

NET GAINS: Peter Lundgren returns a volley during his match against Chris van Rensburg in the Volvo Tennis/Hall of Fame Championship yesterday on the grass courts at the Newport Casino. Lundgren upset van Rensburg, the No. 2 seed, in straight sets, 6-1, 6-4.

Upset of No. 2 seed van Rensburg serves notice to Volvo field

By MIKE SZOSTAK
Journal-Bulletin Sports Writer
NEWPORT — When Peter Lundgren looked at the draw for the Volvo Tennis/Hall of Fame Championships, the 25-year-old Swede groaned.

His first-round opponent was Christo van Rensburg, the No. 2 seed.

"I wasn't happy when I saw the draw," said Lundgren, a finalist here last year (he lost to Jim Pugh) but winner of only two matches in 10 tries in 1990.

Late yesterday afternoon, though, Lundgren was ecstatic. He had survived two break points in the first game of the match and upset van Rensburg, 6-1, 6-4.

The victory was just the tonic a slumping tennis player needs.

"This was big for me. When you lose too many close matches, you start to think. The only way to get out of that is to win," Lundgren said.

It was especially sweet because Lundgren's father, Hans, is traveling with him.

Lundgren snapped a four-month drought yesterday. He had not won a match since the Lipton International Players' Championship in March.

"That's a long time," he said.

"So far I have had a bad year. I had bad luck at Wimbledon and the French (Open). At Wimbledon I was up 2-0 and lost to Jeremy Bates. At the French, I was up 2-1 and lost to Jakob Hlasek. I haven't been lucky on the close calls or the big points, which is unusual for me. I usually win those," he said.

Lundgren, whose highest computer ranking was No. 25 in 1985, has dropped to No. 138.

"Before I came here, I decided not to put any pressure on myself this tournament," Lundgren said. "I told myself just to have fun."

Lundgren opened the match but couldn't have had much fun. Twice he faced break point. But twice he saved the breaker and after the second held serve.

Then he broke van Rensburg's serve in the second game and held serve for a 3-0 lead.

"The first game of the match was big," said van Rensburg, who is ranked No. 49 in the world. "Suddenly I'm down 3-0 when I could be up 2-1. I had two break points and didn't even make him play. I missed two returns. That's something you do in amateurs. He didn't even have to hit the ball. I deserve to lose if I don't make him play the big points."

"I got a little lucky there," Lundgren said, "but that's been my problem this year. I haven't won many close matches."

Lundgren broke van Rensburg again in the sixth game.

Van Rensburg's serve let him down in the second set. He double-faulted seven times. In the third game he double-faulted four times, the last on break point. He double-faulted twice in the fifth game, when he held his serve, and once in the sixth, when he again held serve.

"You can't do that," van Rensburg said of the flurry of double-faults. "You do that in juniors. If you do that in the pros, you should stop. Stop, or go home."

Lundgren said van Rensburg

'Big Time' Abe joins biggest in softball lore

BILL REYNOLDS

CRANSTON — Maybe his personal nickname on his CB radio tells you all you have to know about Abe Baker. It is "Big Time Softball," and for a lot of years around here that's just what Baker was. Big Time Softball.

That was mostly back in the mid '60's, back when Baker played for Local 57, the state's fast-pitch softball team. The games were played at Engineers Field on Gano Street in Providence's East Side back then, and sometimes drew as many as 5,000 people. The names were Carl Walker and Ron Cooper, Eddie Johnson and Bobby Quinn, Bob Bellemore and Tootsie Thompson, Joe

Brett Quigley leads amateur march of youth

WARWICK — Golf may be a game for all ages, but it was the youth who dominated the leader board yesterday in the opening round of the Rhode Island Golf Association Amateur championship at Warwick Country Club.

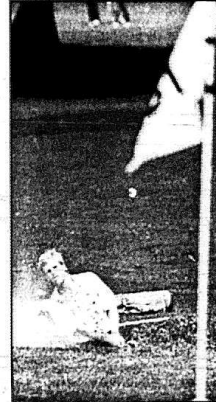

Three of the top four scorers in yesterday's first round of stroke play are juniors in college.

Brett Quigley, of the University of South Carolina and a member of Rhode Island Country Club, leads the field of 106 golfers into today's second round of stroke play. Quigley, who fired a 1-under-par round of 68, holds a one-stroke advantage over Marc St. Martin of Kirkbrake, Art Coia of Metacomel and Pat Sheehan of Woodland Greens. Coia and Sheehan attend Georgetown University and the University of Hartford, respectively.

After today's second round, the top 32 golfers will qualify for match play, which begins tomorrow and ends with the 36-hole final Friday.

Quigley, who has never competed in the tournament before, made a sparkling debut yesterday. He overcame a double-bogey up the par-4, 399-yard 4th hole.

Casino sells rights to Slims tourney

NEWPORT — Yesterday was Opening Day for the Volvo Tennis/Hall of Fame Championships, but the big news at the Casino concerned the Virginia Slims of Newport women's tournament.

It will be played here next week for the last time.

The International Tennis Hall of Fame has sold its sanction for the women's tournament to International Management Group of Cleveland for $1.2 million to be paid over a four-year period. IMG will move the tournament to Germany.

The Hall of Fame plans to invest the proceeds from the sale and apply the interest to its operating budget, said COL. WILLIAM F. LONG, executive director.

"We have to see that we have enough money to preserve this place and operate it," Long said.

The Hall of Fame's contract with Virginia Slims expires in two years. The Hall of Fame already agreed not to hold the event in 1992 so the International Tennis Federation could stage Federation Cup matches without competition during the Newport dates.

Long said that Hall of Fame officials also were growing concerned about the tournament's ability to compete in the increasingly expensive tennis marketplace.

"Two years from now we could have had no tournament and no money," Long said.

The decision does not mean that women's tennis at the Hall of Fame is about to join white balls and wood racquets in the museum. The Hall of Fame plans to run an invitational tournament next year. Long said the organization is exploring the possibility of a tournament combining legends and up-and-coming players.

Eyes glued to the set

Sunday was a challenging day for West Germans ERIC JELEN, PATRICK BAUR and ALEXANDER MRONZ. In London, fellow countryman BORIS BECKER played for the singles title at Wimbledon. And in Rome, the West German soccer team played Argentina for the World Cup.

Jelen watched four sets of the Wimbledon final between Becker and STEFAN EDEBERG of Sweden. Then he let to practice.

"But I kept running over to the TV to watch," he said.

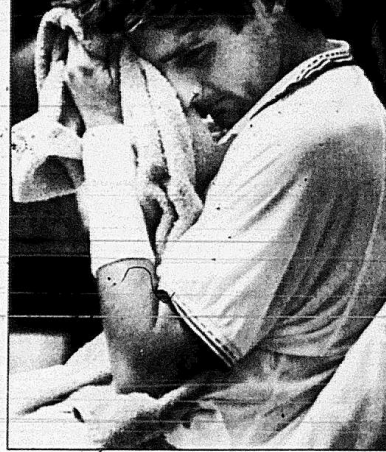

Sunday night the West Germans watched the soccer game on TV. You know the results by now. Becker lost. The soccer team won.

"One was bad luck, the other was good for our country," Jelen said. And the practice was good for him. He won his first-round match yesterday.

Parking at a premium

Despite overcast, fog and drizzle that delayed the start of play for 70 minutes, a crowd of 1,422 showed up at the Hall of Fame yesterday.

If you are driving to Newport today or any time in the next 10 days to watch tennis, parking is a bigger

Residents objected to tennis fans parking at St. Michael's School or Bellevue Court nearby, so the Hall of Fame is operating a free shuttle from the Gateway Center on America's Cup Avenue downtown. Parking is $1 per hour, a maximum of $8

6 get exemptions for Sutton golf
SUTTON, Mass. — Sponsors exemptions were given to six players yesterday for this week's $900,000 Bank of Boston Classic at Pleasant Valley Country Club.

Host professional Bob Molt, and Kevin Johnson of Pembroke, Mass., a member of the 1989 Walker Cup team who recently turned professional, were given exemptions by Ted Ringella, the tournament chairman. Others given berths are David Tom, Marco Dawson, Dwight Nevil and George Cadenas.

The annual Cuz Minigola pro-am will be held tomorrow, beginning at 7 a.m. Play in the tournament, which will offer a $162,000 prize, begins Thursday. Blaine McCallister is defending champion and others entered include Curtis Strange, Wayne Levi, Fuzzy Zoeller, Mark Calcavecchia, Patrick Horgan and Jim Hallet.

Maradona blames mafia for loss
ROME (AP) — Diego Maradona, frustrated at Argentina's loss in the World Cup, said yesterday the mafia orchestrated a plot to ensure a West German victory.

Maradona, the Argentine captain, also said that Mexican referee Edgardo Codesal was a stronger opponent than West Germany in Sunday's championship match.

Codesal ejected two Argentine players and awarded a decisive penalty kick to the German team in the final minutes of play.

"I will have to tell my elder daughter Dalmita that the mafia exists also in soccer. The penalty which defeated us did not exist and was given to award victory to West Germany and punish Argentina," Maradona said at Rome's International Airport before boarding a plane for Buenos Aires.

Perkins signs on as UConn's A.D.

LEW PERKINS, who passed up the Connecticut athletic director's post three years ago because the timing wasn't right, said yesterday it was time to move back near his roots.

"The opportunity to work here at Connecticut was too good to pass up, particularly the second time around," said Perkins, a native of Chelsea, Mass., who resigned as Maryland's athletic director. "As you get older it gets important to move a little closer to home and develop some roots."

Perkins, 45, was UConn's choice for athletic director in 1987, when he was athletic director at Wichita State. But Perkins accepted the Maryland job, and Connecticut hired TERRY TURNER.

Now Perkins will replace Turner, who was named North Carolina State's athletic director on April 20.

Perkins on Monday signed a five-year contract calling for $115,000 a year, which is subject to annual review by the university. The contract includes an escape clause that allows Perkins to buy out the remainder of his contract if he chooses to leave voluntarily, interim university president HARRY J. HARTLEY said.

served well in the beginning of the match, but "later he missed everything. His second serve was hitting on the baseline."

"My concentration wasn't what it should be," van Rensburg said. "I just got here two days ago. I flew all night. I thought I was playing tomorrow. That's not an excuse. You have to cope. I'm just saying it may have been nice to have another day."

Lundgren, in a sense, had this match twice. On his first match point, van Rensburg netted his return. But chair umpire Richard Kaufman called a let.

"I knew it was a let, but it was a late call. That can be really dangerous. You can lose your concentration or get angry," Lundgren said.

Lundgren served again, then pointed a forehead deep to the ad. van Rensburg netted the backhand and Lundgren clenched his fist in triumph.

van Rensburg was the only seeded player who lost yesterday. Fourth-seeded Gary Muller rallied from a set down and took a three-setter from Jimmy Brown, 3-6, 6-3, 7-6. He won the tiebreaker 7-3.

Seventh-seeded Eric Jelen blitzed and a bogey on the par-4, 393-yard 8th hole with birdie putts on the 7th, 9th, 11th, 12th and 14th. All five putts were from more than 10 feet, including a 20-footer on the par-3, 197-yard 7th and a 30-footer on the par-4, 379-yard 11th.

"I made a couple of stupid mistakes, like the double-bogey on the fourth hole, but I was able to recover — the five birdies helped a lot," said Quigley, the son of Paul Quigley, who shot a 73 yesterday.

"I think I played with a better frame of mind," he added. "The more you play, the more you realize you're going to make some bogeys and double-bogeys. You've just got to be patient and hang in there. I'm happy with the way I played. I hit the ball well and I putted really well."

Quigley said while some golfers only strive to qualify for match play, he is shooting for medalist honors.

"It would mean a lot to me if I do get medalist. It also would be nice to beat my father," added Quigley, as he glanced at the leader board and smiled.

St. Martin, who won the tournament in 1976, 1984 and 1988, shot even par on both the front and back nine. He made up for two bogeys with birdies on par-5, 382-yard 3rd and par-5, 478-yard 15th holes.

On the latter hole, St. Martin used a driver and 5-wood to get on the green in two. His 20-foot putt for an eagle missed by two feet.

"I played a solid round. I hit a lot of fairways and I hit a lot of greens," said St. Martin, who made 14 greens in regulation. "I didn't do anything spectacular, but I didn't get into any big trouble either."

Coia, on the other hand, did get into big trouble. Fortunately for him, his golf bag proved worthy of a first-aid kit. His birdie on the 8th hole was perfect.

"That was an exciting hole," said Coia, another first-time player in the tournament, who lives in Barrington. "I hit my drive into the trees, punched my second shot into the trap with an 8-iron and holed my sand shot from about 35 feet away for a birdie."

Coia also birdied the par-4, 451-yard first hole. His second shot for an eagle on that hole missed by just six inches. With bogeys on the 4th and 5th holes, Coia shot an even-par 34 on the front nine.

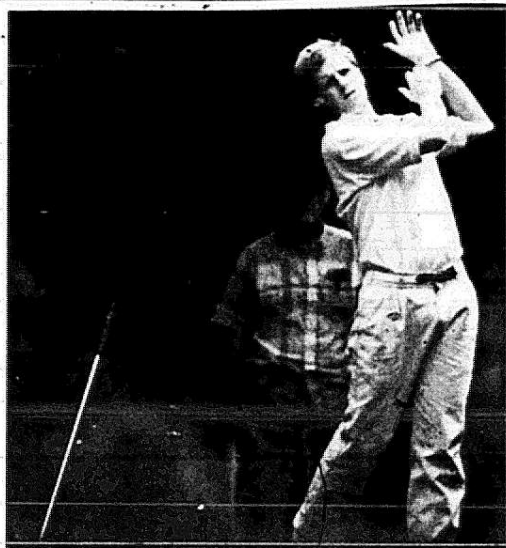

On the back, Coia bogeyed the 10th and 16th holes, and sank birdie putts on the 12th and 17th in forging his even-par round of 69.

"I'm real happy with a 69," he said. "On the back, Coia bogeyed the 10th and 16th holes, and sank birdie putts on the 12th and 17th in forging his even-par round of 69."

Sheehan, who played in the same threesome as Brett Quigley, could have tied his playing partner for the lead if he hadn't bogeyed the par-4, 425-yard 16th hole. With birdies on the 4th and 9th, Sheehan posted a 1-under-par 33 at the turn. He also birdied the 15th, but his two bogeys on the back nine cost him a share of the lead.

Tom Goryl of Wanamansett and Jeff Giguere of Potowomut, who both fired 5-over-par rounds of 70, also are within striking distance of the lead.

"I haven't been playing that well lately, but I guess the golf gods were with me today," said Goryl, who drained a three-foot birdie putt on the par-4, 412-yard 12th hole. "I had a real solid round

BAD FORM: Brett Quigley loses his club after hitting tee shot on 17th hole in R.I. Amateur at Warwick Country Club.

Wojtowicz ties Quigley for medal

WARWICK — Brett Quigley and Chuck Wojtowicz shared medalist honors as strong, gusty winds inflated many scores in the Rhode Island Golf Association Amateur championship at Warwick Country Club.

The field was cut to 32 for match play, which begins today, continues tomorrow and winds up with a 36-hole final on Friday.

Quigley, a junior at the University of South Carolina who is playing in his first R.I. Amateur, and Wojtowicz, making the cut for the eighth time in nine starts, took difbetter. I just tried to be more relaxed."

The wind, which helped Quigley's drive on the ninth find a bunker alongside Narragansett Bay gave a lot of the state's best golfers problems yesterday. In Monday's opening round, nine players birdied the ninth. Yesterday, with most golfers using 1, 2 or 3-irons to reach the green, 194 yards away, only Joe Fogarty of Potowomut got down in two shots.

"The wind was tough in the morning," said Quigley, whose dad Paul, has won two State Amateurs. "I just never started hitting it good. I was fighting it the whole day."

But Quigley, who plays out of R.I. Country Club, was pleased with the final results. "I was happy coming back to shoot 1-under (back nine even with bogeys on the last two holes. That's pretty good in the wind, especially after shooting 40 on the front."

Although Wojtowicz tied him for medalist honors, Quigley accomplished another of the goals he set for the tournament. He beat his father, but not by much.

The senior Quigley, this year's Stroke Play champion, carded a 74 for a combined 145, winding up a stroke behind Pat Sheehan of Woodland Greens and Tom Goryl of Wampanoag.

Sheehan, a senior at the University of Hartford, had a big chip shot on the eighth hole, and came out of the bunker to par nine. He shot a 38 on the front side, then rallied with birdies on the 14th and 15th holes.

"I hit a lot more greens on the back than on the front," said Sheehan, the former Pilgrim High School standout, who played in a threesome with Brett Quigley and Shane Drury. Drury, from Metacomet, set the pace on the front side with a 35.

Art Coia of Metacomet took eight more shots than he did in Monday's round, but his 77 gave him a 146 total, good for sixth place.

ferent paths to medalist scores of 4-over-par 142.

Wojtowicz, who plays out of Montaup, turned in the best round of the day, carding a 1-under-par 68. He had three birdies in touring the front nine in 1-under 33 and had a 35 on the back nine, including a birdie on the 15th.

"I got off to a good start, and hope to get off to a good start again (today). I'll try to shoot another 68," he said. Wojtowicz birdied the first, fourth and sixth holes.

"I missed two fairways all day, that helped," he said. "The wind is always blowing at Montaup, so it didn't make much difference here."

"I kind of hope it is blowing again (today), the more wind, the better," he joked.

Quigley, who led after the opening round with 68, was in no joking mood after the turn, especially after double bogeys on the eighth and ninth holes gave him a 6-over-par 40. But he scrambled on the back nine, came up with three birdies and carded a 1-over 34, despite missing pars on the final two holes.

"I settled down on the back nine," said Quigley, who was unable to play in previous R.I. Amateurs because of commitments in other tournaments. "I played a lot

Also, Frank Conner, Paul Trittler, Sonny Skinner, Ernie Gonzalez, Mike Schuchart, Brian Kamm, Jim Woodwood, Mike Smith, Pat Burke, Steve Lamontagne, Sean Murphy, Fred Wadsworth, Don Reese, John Adams and Vince Winsness.

The tournament is sponsored by Coca-Cola.

Hayes stumbles to upset victory in second round

By JOHN CULLEN
Journal-Bulletin Sports Writer

WARWICK — There was nothing flashy about Charlie Hayes' second-round upset of second-seeded Chuck Wojtowicz yesterday in the Rhode Island Golf Association Amateur championship at Warwick Country Club.

No brilliant birdie putts rolling in from the far reaches of the green. No masterfully-executed chips or sand shots plunging gracefully into the hole.

In fact, Hayes' win bordered on down-right ugly.

"It wasn't too exciting," said Hayes, a member of Wamunetony Country Club whose 6-over-par 75 was good enough to beat Wojtowicz 2 up, and earn himself a berth in the quarterfinals. "Neither of us played too well. I left the door open for him on several holes, but he didn't take advantage of the opportunities."

Wojtowicz, who plays out of Montauk, was tied with Brett Quigley for medalist honors after shooting 142 in two rounds of stroke play Monday and Tuesday. He defeated Bob Grossguth of West Warwick, 4 and 3, in the opening round of match play yesterday morning, but his normally strong game began to collapse against Hayes.

Hayes, who shot 152 in stroke play, took a two-hole advantage into the back nine. Wojtowicz won the par-5, 478-yard 15th hole with a par, but three putts for bogey on the par-4, 460-yard 16th and enabled Hayes to regain his two-hole advantage.

Wojtowicz clinched the par-3, 212-yard 17th with a par, and needed to win the par-4, 422-yard 18th to stay alive. He destroyed any chance of a comeback, however, by shanking his second shot into the fairway of an adjacent hole. Hayes sealed the match with another plain-but-effective par.

"I played a lot better in the morning round," said Hayes, who easily beat Jim Kelleher (unattached), 7 and 5. "But in the afternoon I got some pars and put the pressure on (Wojtowicz)."

Hayes faces Marc St. Martin of Kirkbrae today in the quarterfinals. St. Martin, who carded a 148 in stroke play, edged Shane Drury of Metacomet, 1 up, and Tom Hebert of Cranston, 5 and 3, yesterday.

"I hit the ball well and my short game was really sharp (yesterday)," said St. Martin, who drained two 15-foot birdie putts on the back nine in his victory over Hebert.

Quigley, a member of Rhode Island Country Club and a medalist because he advanced further than Wojtowicz in match play, survived a tough morning match with Tom Acciardo of Cranston, 1 up, before beating Steve Cole of Valley, 3 and 2.

R.I. AMATEUR

In his match against Acciardo, the top-seeded Quigley was down by a hole after the front nine. But Quigley birdied the 11th and then sank a 46-foot birdie putt on the 12th to take his first lead. He never trailed again in the match.

"They say your first match is always the toughest — I knew it would be because Tommy is a good player," said Quigley. "My mind was racing at times and there was the thought that I could lose, but that putt on the 12th hole really turned things around for me."

Quigley plays Greg Richard of Kirkbrae today. Richard made the quarterfinals by topping Jeff Giguere of Potowomut, 3 and 2, and Norm Lutz of Pawtucket, 2 and 1. Richard was two holes down to Lutz after nine, but took the 10th, 12th and 13th with pars to go 1-up. Richard also won the 15th and 17th with birdie putts.

"I hit a lot of greens on the back nine and (Lutz) didn't — that made a difference," said Richard, who hit seven of eight greens in regulation while Lutz made only three.

Pat Sheehan — who defeated defending champion Dr. George Pirie of Valley, 2 and 1, and Steve Marshall of Woodland Greens, 3 and 2 — plays Don Wright of Potowomut in another quarterfinal.

"I'm glad this day is over," Sheehan said after yesterday's matches. "I struggled on the front nine in both matches, but I survived with good back nines."

FAMILY AFFAIR: Paul Quigley talks with his son, Brett, during tourney yesterday. Both won their second-round matches.

but spent only part of the time practicing. He also was chasing down other players in the tournament, inviting them to take part in a Pro-Am for autism, a benefit that Quigley hosted at his course yesterday.

When he wasn't doing that, he was trying to find out how the rest of the family was doing on the golf course — his older brother, Paul, was trying to win his third State Amateur Championship this week at Warwick. Then there was Paul's son, Brett, whose first exposure to big-time golf came when he caddied for his Uncle Dana at Pleasant Valley as a 12-year-old eight years ago.

He was co-medalist in the amateur. But if times have changed in his world, Dana Quigley's personality is still very much the same. He's still the affable, outgoing, outspoken Dana Quigley. He was typically candid when talking about how he might do in the tournament. "I've got no chance to beat anyone this week. I'm not in the right frame of mind."

He added, quickly, though, that he was going to give it his best shot. And, whatever happened, he was going to enjoy himself.

"I miss it. I miss it a million," he said of life as a member of the tour. I had more fun when I was out there practicing (Tuesday) than I've had in a long time. I absolutely love it."

Several friends came up and asked how he was doing. They told him there were still stories among the players about how he was such a great striker of the ball, as good or better than most players on tour.

"It made me feel good," Quigley said. "I know I can still hit it with those guys, I can still shape the shots."

But at the game's top level, just hitting the ball great is not enough. "I know I can hit it better than a lot of those guys, but I don't have the mind set, the proper mental game to play with those guys," he said. Quigley talked about how he admires the four area players who have followed in his footsteps, Brad Faxon, Billy Andrade, Pat Horgan and Jim Hallet.

"They're all so positive. They all have the right attitude," he said. "I was talking to Pat (Horgan) and he was telling me how he made triple bogey on the last hole last week (at the tournament in Williamsburg, Va.) and it cost him $15,000." Horgan made $4,733. Had he parred the final hole, he would have made $20,000. Quigley said such incidents drove him from the tour. He did not handle them well, he said.

"You know what Pat said? He said 'It's just one hole.' He said he knows he's playing well, so it didn't bother him. He's got the right attitude," Quigley said.

"I was talking to Brad (Faxon) at the Skins Game last week (the Battle of the Sexes Skins Game at Firefly) and telling him he should be here this week. He could win it," Quigley continued. "But he told me the year (three years ago) when he played so well at the British Open earned him more respect among the other players than anything else he's ever done. He said that respect is what he wants. That's why he had to go to the British Open and not play here."

"He's so positive about the game. All our guys out there are," Quigley said, almost with envy in his voice of the younger players.

Quigley has dominated the regional competition since becoming a club pro. He won the sectional championship last year, thus earning an exemption to Pleasant Valley. He has won the Mass. Open three times, the Rhode Island Open twice, two N.E. PGA titles and the New Hampshire, Maine and N.E. Opens once apiece. He talks about how he once apiece. He talks about how he is a club pro now, a job he very much enjoys. Given a choice, though, he says, he still would love to be back on tour.

The return to the summer schedule at Pleasant Valley has not helped the overall strength of the field. Only three of the top 25 money winners this year are here. Mark Calavecchia, Wayne Levi and Tommy Armour 3rd. But there still are enough names to attract fans, among them Curtis Strange and Fuzzy Zoeller, in addition to the local stars, Quigley, Horgan and Hallet.

Kratzmann survives in Newport tennis

NEWPORT — Two seeded players advanced to the quarterfinals of the Volvo Tennis/Hall of Fame Championships yesterday.

Third-seeded Mark Kratzmann rallied from a set down and beat Bruce Derlin, and seventh-seeded Eric Jelen cruised to a straight-set victory over doubles star Rick Leach.

In the only other singles match yesterday, unseeded Richard Matsuzewski lost a three-setter to last year's runnerup, Peter Lundgren. Drizzle delayed play at the Newport Casino for 90 minutes.

In a doubles upset, fourth-seeded Neil Broad and Gary Muller lost to Stefan Kruger and Simon Youl. Top-seeded Tim Mayotte is scheduled to play his second-round match today against unseeded Robbie Weiss. Fourth-seeded Gary Muller will meet Patrick Baur, and No. 5 Jim Pugh will play Brian Shelton.

SINGLES (Second round)
Eric Jelen def. Rick Leach, 6-0, 6-2; Mark Kratzmann def. Bruce Derlin, 6-4, 6-2; Peter Lundgren def. Richard Matsuzewski, 6-7, 6-2, 6-3.

DOUBLES (Second round)
Leach-Pugh def. Scott-Solter, 6-4, 6-1; Aldrich-Visser def. Garraw-Saluma, 7-6, 6-4; Kruger-Youl def. Broad-Muller, 6-4, 7-6; Dyle-Fitzgerald def. Carter-Deves, 6-2, 4-6, 6-4.

TODAY'S MATCHES

Mark Kratzmann, No. 6 in the week-in, has won five different titles with four partners this year. He is playing with Darren Cal at this week. And the team of Neil Broad and Gary Muller were here until losing yesterday. Broad was ranked No. 20 in doubles, Muller No. 29.

The amazing thing is that not one of those doubles players is ranked in the Top 50 in singles. Kratzmann, at No. 54, has the highest singles ranking, Leach, at No. 249, the lowest.

"There are different reasons why the rankings are so different," said Pugh, who is ranked No. 77 in singles.

"Rick has played only six or seven singles matches, but his results are divided by a minimum of 14 tournaments. Sometimes he doesn't get a chance to qualify. If we're playing in a final on Sunday, he doesn't qualify for the next tournament."

"And players have certain styles. Some are more suited to doubles," Pugh said.

Aldrich, ranked No. 171 in singles, said singles and doubles are two different games.

"In doubles you have to be more active. You have to volley better. Singles is turning more into a power game, the big serve," he said.

Visser, ranked No. 151 in singles, agreed: "Doubles is a totally different game. You only play half the court. You're playing cross-court most of the time. You're not returning from both sides of the court."

"In doubles, you have to have quick hands and good reflexes," Aldrich added.

That was evident in their first-round doubles match against Brian Garraw and Sven Saluma yesterday. Aldrich and Visser attacked the net and punched volleys up to the middle and slashed volleys toward the sidelines.

When receiving, they tried to smash the ball through their opponents, or set them up to pass. Occasionally they lobbed over the 5-8 Garraw.

Aldrich and Visser won the match, 7-6, 6-4, but not before Garraw and Saluma offered some nifty shot-making of their own.

Pugh and Leach played later, after a 90-minute rain delay, and defeated James Schor and John Sobel, 6-4, 6-1. Several hundred fans leaned against a chain link fence on an outside court to view their match rather than watch Peter Lundgren and Richard Matsuzewski play singles in the stadium.

Pugh and Leach and Aldrich and Visser obviously are experienced partners. They move well together. They are rarely caught out of position. And they communicate.

Quigley has dominated the regional competition since becoming a club pro. He won the sectional championship last year, thus earning an exemption to Pleasant Valley. He has won the Mass. Open three times, the Rhode Island Open twice, two N.E. PGA titles and the New Hampshire, Maine and N.E. Opens once apiece. He talks about how he once apiece. Morgan's dilemma: What to do with Greenwell

By SEAN McADAM
Journal-Bulletin Sports Writer

BOSTON — In a meeting yesterday of front office personnel, the manager and his coaching staff, the Red Sox reviewed the first half of the season and addressed their needs for the second half.

"The consensus was we need more pitching," said Joe Morgan.

So what else is new?

But there also is an underlying concern about the team's offense. Only three teams have hit fewer home runs than the Red Sox, and they've been outscored by every team in their division except the feeble New York Yankees.

A big part of the problem can be traced to the miserable first half experienced by Mike Greenwell, who has just 13 extra-base hits, fewer than half the number collected by Jody Reed, who has 28.

With 50 games played, Greenwell has hit only two homers (both in the same game at home) and has a paltry 26 RBI. That's not the kind of production expected from the No. 3 hitter.

And if Greenwell's troubles persist, Morgan may be forced to drop him down in the batting order.

"Definitely," replied Morgan, when asked if Greenwell may soon be shuffled to a lower spot in the lineup.

Morgan mentioned Ellis Burks (.302, 10, 44) as the most likely choice to replace Greenwell in the third spot. Dwight Evans, who has batted third before in his career, and Carlos Quintana (.319) might be other possibilities.

Morgan ordinarily doesn't place a great deal of the importance on his team's batting order, insisting that is a much-overrated topic. Thus, with the exception of a handful of games, he's stayed with Greenwell at No. 3, waiting for the left fielder to produce the way he did in his first three seasons, when he averaged 101 RBI.

But Morgan's patience may be exhausted. In the midst of a pennant race, the Red Sox can SUTTON, Mass. — Patrick Horgan summed up yesterday's activities at Pleasant Valley Country Club as well as anyone.

"I don't know why so many guys left to go to the British Open," Horgan said. "They could have stayed here and had the same thing."

The PGA Tour's first summer visit to Pleasant Valley in 14 years was anything but summertime pleasant.

Not that Mike Smith was complaining, though. Smith, 40, a journeyman from Selma, Ala., who has had to go back to qualifying school nine times, battled the steady rain and cool temperatures for a 6-under-par 65 to earn the first-round lead in the $900,000 Bank of Boston Classic.

Bill Glasson and former national amateur champion Scott Verplank tied for second at 67. Former U.S. Open champion Scott Simpson was in at 68, along with Chris Perry, D.A. Weibring and Rick Fehr. John Mahaffey, the all-time money leader at Pleasant Valley, led a group of seven at 69 and Horgan was one of nine players at 70.

The day turned out very different than had been anticipated. Tournament chairman Ted Mingolla has been working for years to get the event, held for more than a decade after Labor Day, back into peak vacation time, hoping both for better weather and bigger crowds.

Neither happened yesterday.

It could have been October, with the miserable day the weatherman provided. Crowds were small early and virtually nonexistent as the day wore on and the rain continued.

"It was a steady, annoying rain, different than most times," Newport's Horgan said. "A lot of times we get heavy rain and they just stop play for a while, but it wasn't like that today."

Play was halted for 95 minutes early on, from 10:10 to 11:45 a.m., but it let up enough to allow play to

Being a golf prodigy exacts heavy toll

WARWICK — He has become the latest of our golf prodigies. Brett Quigley has, one of those kids who seemingly came of age on the sports page. He spent his time at Barrington High School as the top junior golfer in the state. In the summer of 1987, before his freshman year at the University of South Carolina, he won the national junior title at Vail, Colorado. The next summer he won the prestigious Northeast Amateur.

He comes from what has become the state's premier golf family. He is the son of Paul, who has won the state amateur twice. He is the nephew of Dana, the first native Rhode Islander to make the PGA Tour. In a sense, he's been an apprentice in a golf workshop, ever since he was about four and his father gave him a sawed-off club and taught him how to hit a whiffle ball in the backyard. He played in his first tournament at 10 years old. When he was 12 he caddied for his uncle at a PGA event. He has played golf with PGA pros Brad Faxon and Billy Andrade since he was about 14, learning the game from the inside-out, virtually growing up with the game.

"People expect golf from me," Quigley said. "Everywhere I go people say 'you're the golfer.'"

There is a downside to this, of course, and Brett Quigley, at age 20, is very aware of it. He's never been allowed to be just another kid golfer with his own personal dreams. He's always been a Quigley, complete with his father's and WARWICK — Paul Quigley had just beaten Tom Goryl, 2 and 1, in a quarterfinal match yesterday morning at Warwick Country Club.

Having found a haven from the downpour under the score's tent, Quigley took off his rain-soaked cap and looked at one of the semifinal brackets.

The inevitable showdown was a little more than an hour away.

Quigley turned and looked at his next opponent, who was sitting a few feet away and staring at the same bracket. The young man seemed deep in thought.

"How's your rain game, shorty?" Paul Quigley asked his son.

Brett Quigley just smiled at his father, the man whom he would have to beat to advance to the finals of the RIGA Amateur championship.

For years they had played together for fun. Now they would battle head-to-head for the first time in tournament competition.

As the cold rain rushed down harder and harder, the emotions swirled inside them.

Paul talked more, laughed more and, on the outside at least, seemed less overwhelmed by the situation than his son. Perhaps his greater experience would serve him well in the match.

But Brett — who had clinched a berth in the semifinals in a dramatic 30-foot birdie putt on the 19th hole to beat Greg Richard of Kirkbrae, 1 up — let his golf do the talking.

Pats hang 'not wanted' sign for Sims, Collins

By JIM DONALDSON
Journal-Bulletin Sports Writer

FOXBORO, Mass. — Tony Collins may want to return to New England, but the Patriots don't want him back.

Nor are the Patriots considering bringing back Kenneth Sims, as was reported in yesterday's Boston Globe.

"We have not considered bringing back either of them," general manager Patrick Sullivan said yesterday.

Drug problems were the primary reason both Sims and Collins were released by the Patriots.

Given the emphasis that Joe Mendes, the Pats' director of player operations, places on character — a concept heartily endorsed by Sullivan and new coach Rod Rust — it is virtually inconceivable that Sims or Collins ever would be brought back to New England.

"I made it pretty clear, as diplomatically as I could," Sullivan said, "that the chances of Kenneth Sims coming back were slim and none — and Slim has left town."

Sims, who twice previously tested positive for drug abuse, was waived last month after he had been arrested in Austin, Tex., on charges of possession of cocaine.

Collins was reinstated by the NFL earlier this week after having been suspended since 1988 for repeated substance abuse.

Although he expressed an interest in returning to the Patriots, the Pats had no interest in him.

"I told Tony two months ago," Sullivan said, "that we weren't interested in bringing him back."

"I explained to him that a legitimate chance for making our team simply was not there for him, and that he ought to explore opportunities elsewhere."

Collins was with the Patriots in rushing from 1981 to 1983, and again in '87, and also led the team in receiving in 1985 and '87. But a series of drug-related problems led to his being released by the Patriots in 1988.

When, during a tryout that summer with the Indianapolis Colts, Collins tested positive for cocaine, he was suspended by the league.

Now a free agent, Collins can sign with any team.

Sims, who was the first player picked in the 1982 draft after having been an all-American defensive lineman at the University of Texas, was plagued by injury problems throughout his NFL career.

Never a stickler for conditioning, Sims showed up for mini-camp in May overweight and out of shape.

"We're looking to build a team for the '90s," Sullivan said yesterday. "We're not going to do it using players who have problems in the '80s."

GOLF

Mitchell makes a big splash, but not kind he hoped

By ED DUCKWORTH

SUTTON, Mass. — Bobby Mitchell can play this game. Honest. Hey, the guy has won two PGA tournaments and earned almost half a million dollars over the last 24 years, so it's unlikely anybody will be offering him two shots a side in a $5 Nassau tomorrow.

But yesterday, in the opening round of the $750,000 Bank of Boston Classic at Pleasant Valley Country Club, Mitchell discovered just how humbling the game of golf can be even to a seasoned veteran of 200 professional tournaments.

He shot — are you ready for this? — a 22-over-par 93 that was higher, lighted by a big fat 10 on the 18th hole, the 18th hole, par-3 seventh hole.

"I've had better days," the 47-year-old former Cleveland Open (1971) and Tournament of Champions (72) winner said with only the slightest trace of sarcasm after he had disqualified himself by declining to sign his scorecard.

"You shoot a score like whatever it was I had, you'd better just pack the clubs in the car and go home. This can't get any worse than this."

Mitchell hasn't won a penny on the tour since 1988, but he figured he might do some good in New England because he'd been striking the ball solidly in his daily rounds at the Danville, Va. Golf Club and because he'd always been around par in 10 tournament appearances at Pleasant Valley.

"I tied for fourth here one year (1969)," he explained in a soft drawl, "and I finished sixth another time (72). So I feel as if I know this course and can handle it, despite what happened."

What happened, basically, is that Mitchell let one tee shot get away from him before he compounded the error in a manner only a 20-handicapper could appreciate.

Three over after six holes, the bespectacled Virginian pulled out a No. 5 iron for his tee shot to the seventh, a tricky hole surrounded on three sides by water.

"The pin was in a tough spot," he recalled with a sigh as he stared into his almost empty locker. "From right, just over the water. But I was confident I'd pulled the right club from my bag."

Amateur

He won three of the first four holes with pars to take an early 3-up lead. Paul took the seventh hole with a par, but Brett battled through torrential rain and won the next three holes with pars.

A five-hole lead after 10 holes is virtually insurmountable in ideal conditions, much less a monsoon. Paul knew it was only a matter of time.

After halving the 11th hole, Brett took the 12th with a par, forcing his father to win the 13th to stay alive. Paul's last hope was a 12-foot birdie putt. When the ball rolled past the edge of the hole, it was time to concede his jubilant son a victory hug.

"It was tough emotionally," Paul said, after losing the match, 6 and 5. "Normally I'm a real grinder in match play. I don't talk much to my opponent, and I would never eat lunch with him before a match. All that was different (yesterday)."

"But it was a no-lose situation for me," he added. "I'm very happy for Brett."

"I really feel for him," said Brett, the tournament medalist who will play Charlie Hayes of Newport in the 36-hole final today. "I know he'd like to play (today), and I know he didn't take it easy on me."

"I didn't lay down," said Paul, "but if it was a fight, they would've called it. That's as bad as anybody's ever beaten me."

Paul said his poor putting hurt him repeatedly in the match. "Just didn't make any putts," he said. "I didn't hit the ball firmly and I wasn't aggressive enough. Against a player like Brett, it's going to catch up with you. When he's patient and gets rolling with his putter, he can make holes and pars from just about anywhere."

"The rain was really tough," said Brett. "On the eighth through 11th holes especially, it was a case of hit-and-hope. But I kept a positive attitude and I felt really confident with my putter."

Maybe, maybe not.

Either way, Mitchell "lost" his shot to the right.

"I think the grip was a little wet," he said, "because the club turned in my hand just a split second before impact. When I looked up, I could see the ball splashing into the water."

Disgusted with himself and probably a little hot under the collar, too, Mitchell proceeded to the area in front of the stream and dropped another ball for his third shot.

"The grass was kind of high," he recalled, "and when I let the ball go over my shoulder it kind of settled into a hole."

Now, instead of facing a relatively easy 25-yard wedge shot, Mitchell was forced to lay open the blade of his sand wedge in the hope he could "cut" the ball onto the green.

He skulled it into the water. So he dropped another ball and watched it roll into the same hole, which was now even deeper.

He skulled that one into the water, too.

"I kind of blacked out after that," he said, "but I guess I must have got the third one on the green. That was pretty much the tournament for me."

Mitchell finished the first nine in 47, which was 11 over par.

Wet, cold and suddenly less than enthusiastic, he allowed his way to an 11-over 56 on the back nine, wondering all the while why fate had played such a nasty trick on him.

"After you get 12 or 14 over," he explained, "you just say things that no one else would say. I kept trying, but playing in the rain made it tough. I was really disgusted with myself because I'd been playing good coming here."

Mitchell said he refused to sign his card because, well, there really was no point.

"If you're five or six over," he said, "you can tell yourself there's still a chance. But the spot I'd put myself in was impossible. This may have been the worst score I've shot since I turned pro at 15."

Mitchell plans to return home today to begin preparing for the Virginia Open, scheduled for next week in Richmond.

"I'll take a couple of days," he said, "but I'll forget all about this. I still think I can play. In fact, I know I can. They always say things can't get worse until you hit rock bottom. So I'm hoping this is it. Maybe they'll begin getting better now."

In a field filled with little-known players, Smith is an appropriate leader. He turned professional in 1973 after being a Junior College All-American at Brevard in Florida. But he did not earn his tour card until 1980.

He had a second-place finish at Las Vegas in 1985 and tied for 8th in this tournament in 1984, but otherwise has had problems competing on tour. Four times he has lost his card but regained playing rights. He lost his card in 1986 and most recently in 1989.

Wright trimmed the advantage to 2-up by winning the 15th and 16th, but the match ended when the 17th was played with a bogey.

Hayes, who lost in the tournament finals in 1975 and 1980, said the adverse weather conditions affected his rhythm yesterday.

"I've played in worse," said Hayes, who edged Marc St. Martin of Kirkbrae, 2 up, in the quarterfinals. "Even though the conditions were bad, I could've played a lot better. The greens were in real good condition considering all the water they were holding."

Wright credited his opponent with some clutch play. "Charlie made the key shots, especially for pars on the 10th and 12th holes," said Wright, who beat Pat Sheehan of Woodland Greens, 5 and 4, in the quarterfinals. "He got the big lead and rode it out, just as he should with these conditions."

"I was disappointed in that I didn't really challenge Charlie between the ninth and 14th holes. You can't do that against a player like him."

"But overall I played well," he added. "This is the farthest I've ever gone in this tournament."

Hayes said his strategy against Quigley will be to keep the ball in play.

"Brett's a real solid player and he's on a roll right now," said Hayes. "I've got to shoot for pars. I'll try to hit greens and stay out of the trees."

"My strategy will be to play the course," said Quigley. "I just want to play my game and not get too emotional."

Getting emotional today will be the duty of Quigley.

resume and continue through the day. Still, the final three holes on the back nine, which included Dewey Arnette, who was at 2-under-par, could not finish. They walked off in the gathering darkness shortly after 8 p.m. with one hole to play. They will return at 8:30 this morning to play that hole, by which time conditions hopefully will be better for everyone.

"Conditions were bad in that your clubs were wet, your feet were wet," Smith said. "Golf is like baseball and tennis. It's just not meant to be played in the rain."

The expected low scoring, with the course in superb condition, never materialized. Except for the work turned in by Smith, that is.

He earned the lead for the first time in his 10-year career thanks to some sensational work on the greens. He needed only 21 putts and had an awesome nine birdies on putts ranging from 4 to 30 feet. He went one stretch with nine straight one-hole putts.

"I putted fantastically," he said. "I didn't drive the ball real well, but I got a few breaks when I drove it crooked."

In a field filled with little-known players, Smith is an appropriate leader. He turned professional in 1973 after being a Junior College All-American at Brevard in Florida. But he did not earn his tour card until 1980.

uncle's accomplishments hovering over him, and the public perception that he was born to be a golfer, all but programmed to be Rhode Island's next emissary to the PGA Tour.

To the point that the story of this state amateur is not who is going to win, but is Brett Quigley going to lose? Everyone else entered this tournament with the state title as their ultimate goal. Brett Quigley's goal is to be a touring pro. Everyone else is playing for now. He is playing for the future. The state title is just something to put on the resume before he goes on to bigger things.

"I know I'm expected to win," he said. "So there's a certain degree of pressure. But there's always been. I've always been expected to perform."

He said this matter-of-factly, sitting in the locker room of the Warwick Country Club yesterday afternoon. He had just beaten his father to advance to the finals of the state amateur. He first beat his father the summer before his senior year in high school in one of their private matches. Yesterday, he did it in public, the symbolic changing of the guard.

Maybe it was only fitting. For this is his transition summer. One senses he's constantly searching for just how he's supposed to fit in the future that everyone already has mapped out for him. He tells the story of how he was home for Christmas this past winter and someone said, "Oh, you're the golfer." "No," he said. "I'm the human being." It is just one example of how he hates being labeled. Sometimes being a prodigy carries a price tag.

Which is why he seems so intent this summer on distancing himself a little bit from golf, doing things that have nothing to do with golf. Every day he gets up at six in the morning, not to hit buckets of balls, but to go to his summer job of cutting grass. He plays a lot of tennis. He sees his friends. He has other interests. As if he realizes this might just be the last summer of his youth, and he wants to take advantage of it.

It is also a reaction to how much golf he's played the past few years. Golf at the University of South Carolina is virtually a full-time job, often seven hours a day. It hasn't always been easy.

Geddes, Sheehan tie for U.S. Open lead

DULUTH, Ga. (AP) — Jane Geddes and Patty Sheehan posted the best first-round scores in U.S. Women's Open history yesterday and shared the lead at 6-under-par 66.

They held a two-shot lead over Nancy Lopez, who does not have a U.S. Open title among her 42 career victories.

Play on the 6,298-yard Riverside Course of the Atlanta Athletic Club was suspended twice by rain and lightning, the last time at 7:40 p.m. (EDT). Twenty-seven golfers were still on the course when play was suspended.

The USGA said the second round was to begin as scheduled at 7 a.m. today, with the 27 players picking up where they left off at 8:30 a.m. to complete the opening round.

Royals send luckless Red Sox to fifth straight defeat, 5-3

By SEAN McADAM
Journal-Bulletin Sports Writer

BOSTON — Dwight Evans stepped into the batters box in the ninth inning and the capacity crowd at Fenway Park stood and roared in anticipation.

The Red Sox trailed the Kansas City Royals by three runs and the faithful seemed poised for something dramatic. Would Evans deliver another late-inning home run?

No such luck.

No luck at all for the Red Sox on Friday the 13th.

Evans tapped a grounder back to the pitcher and, though a run scored thanks to an error, it wasn't nearly enough for the Red Sox to overtake the Royals, who won a 5-3 decision.

The defeat extended Boston's losing streak to five games, longest of the season.

"We had our chances," said manager Joe Morgan. "Several."

Indeed, the Red Sox began the second half of the season in much the same way they ended the first — by failing to take advantage of their scoring opportunities.

After Kansas City added an insurance run in the eighth against Rob Murphy, the Red Sox threatened in the ninth, loading the bases against reliever Jeff Montgomery and getting the tying run into scoring position.

Jody Reed doubled off The Wall with one out and walks to Carlos Quintana and Tom Brunansky loaded the bases for Evans.

But Evans tapped a ball meekly to Montgomery, who cut down Reed at the plate. MacFarlane threw wildly to first trying to get Evans, allowing Quintana to score and Brunansky and Evans to move to second and third, respectively.

Greenwell, however, grounded to short, ending the game.

Mike Boddicker, who earlier had a 10-game win streak, lost for the second straight time, the victim of a broken bat.

Brett Quigley cleans house

Defeats Hayes easily to win RIGA crown

By JOHN CULLEN
Journal-Bulletin Sports Writer

WARWICK — His drives almost always hit the fairway. His iron shots almost always hit the green. His putts almost always find the hole.

And when he gets into trouble, he almost always executes the perfect rescue shot.

Brett Quigley makes the game of golf look easy.

He did it again yesterday in the 36-hole final of the RIGA Amateur championship at Warwick Country Club. He needed only 27 holes to defeat Charlie Hayes of Newport Country Club 10 and 9, and capture the championship in his first attempt.

But since last September, playing golf has been a struggle for the 20-year-old native of Barrington.

Every time he steps on the course he wrestles with the memories, both good and bad.

He remembers the fun times he and his best friend, Pat Cannon, shared on and off the golf course. He remembers the fun they had at Barrington High School and the University of South Carolina.

But he also remembers the accident — the car crash that took his best friend away from him.

"We had been friends since fifth grade. It had a real big impact on me," Quigley said after yesterday's victory. "It was real hard to play golf, especially the first couple of months after the accident. It's something that's been with me to this day."

Prior to the week-long Amateur championship, Quigley told his parents he was dedicating his performance in the tournament to Cannon. He wanted to be the medalist and he wanted to be the champion — for Pat.

104 golfers couldn't stop him.

Quigley shot 142 in two rounds of stroke play to earn the medal, and cruised through five rounds of match play to take the title. He saved his most convincing win for the final.

Quigley won the first three holes, including the par-4, 36-yard 2nd, with a birdie, to take the early lead. Hayes trimmed the margin to 2-up with a winning par on the 6th hole.

SUITED TO A TEE: Barrington's Brett Quigley shows classic follow-through on this tee shot yesterday at the RIGA Amateur Championship at Warwick Country Club.

Verplank 1 up and feeling fit at Sutton

By PAUL KENYON
Journal-Bulletin Sports Writer

SUTTON, Mass. — This is more like it for Scott Verplank. This is what was expected from him all along.

Verplank, a can't-miss prospect as a youngster and the only amateur to win a PGA Tour event in the last 30 years, moved into the lead at the halfway point of the $500,000 Bank of Boston Classic yesterday at the Pleasant Valley Country Club.

The 26-year-old from Dallas put together a bogey-free, 3-under-par 68 for a 36-hole total of 7-under 135. That was enough for a one-stroke lead over Larry Rinker, whose biggest reputation is that he is the best guitar player on tour. Rinker was one of many players taking advantage of ideal conditions, putting together a 5-under 66 over the 7,110-yard course.

Six others, including 1978 champion John Maffahey, were just two back. Joining Maffahey at 137 were Steve Pate, Brian Watts, first-round leader Mike Smith, Bill Glasston and D.A. Wehring.

After a miserable start Thursday, the tournament brightened considerably in more ways than just the weather. Scores played under the sunny, almost windless conditions, led by a 64 by veteran Dave Eichelberger, 11 shots better than his first-round effort.

Also, in a weak field that needs all the name recognition it can get, several of the biggest names moved into contention. Curtis Strange and Fuzzy Zoeller both had 66s, are only five shots off the pace and will play in the same twosome (10-52) today. Mark Calcavecchia, the only remaining player from the top 25 on the money list, had a 69 for 141.

Several local players had nice days, too. Rapidly improving second-year tour pro Patrick Horgan of

Volvo's top seeds shrivel as the sun shines on Newport

By MIKE STANTON
Journal-Bulletin Sports Writer

NEWPORT — All of the rain this week hasn't been very good for seeds. At least, not the seeds in this year's Volvo Tennis/Hall of Fame Championships.

When the sun finally returned to Newport Casino yesterday, after Thursday's rainout, top-seeded Tim Mayotte was eclipsed by unheralded Robbie Weiss in a second-round makeup match.

The sun also set on defending Newport singles champion Jim Pugh, this year's No. 5 seed, who was ousted by fourth-seeded Gary Muller in a quarter-final match.

Muller, in fact, is the highest seed left in Newport after No. 3 Mark Kratzmann was beaten yesterday by No. 6 Darren Cahill, his doubles partner.

In today's semi-finals, Muller

Cahill takes on seventh-seeded Eric Jelen.

The surprise yesterday was Weiss' 3-6, 6-3, 7-5 upset of Mayotte in a dramatic Stadium Court match. Mayotte, the world's 19th-ranked player who came to Newport to work himself back into shape after an injury-plagued year, played poorly against the 120th-ranked Weiss, who rallied from match point in the final set for the biggest win of his career.

"Anytime you beat somebody in the top 20, it has to help your career," said Weiss, the 1988 NCAA singles champ at Pepperdine University. "This is my best win. This gives me a lot of confidence that I can play with these guys."

But less than an hour after pulling off the biggest win of his career, Weiss was swept in straight sets by
